

Index

The very many ways of spelling any given name made it impractical to index by the original spelling or to cross-reference adequately, so surnames have been grouped under a single spelling for ease of reference. I hope I have correctly assigned names with similar sounds to an appropriate surname; some names are not where they might be expected. The German name Ginter or Gunther became Kinder. The peculiar name Hancebarriger is probably a clerical error, and I have included the name Barrier in the Barriger cluster. Carrs and Kerrs are indexed together under the former. I suspect William Hardyman and William Vardiman were the same person, and James Pattern was really James Patton. Were Simon Cockrill and Simon Cochrain? The names Cecil and Sissell? In the handwriting of the clerks, capital S and L are nearly indistinguishable, as are F and T, lower case k and h, l and t (which typically was not crossed), and terminal n and r. I am sure mis-transcriptions abound, and can offer only apologies and plead a good faith (eye-straining) effort.
